CHRIS UNDERWOOD – A MAN WITH A VIBRANT PERSONALITY & A DIVERSE PORTFOLIO

Born in the hometown of Michael Jackson, Chris Underwood is a man with a vibrant personality who has successfully established a diverse professional portfolio. Indiana-born Chris Underwood has been operating in the music industry for more than two decades as a music producer and a talent manager. Underwood grew up in an entrepreneurial background with his father running a pest control business. It helped him acquire an in-depth understanding of managing the operations of a business, which led him to establish an artist management company, MyLife Entertainment.

As the owner and CEO of MyLife Entertainment, Underwood desires to reform hip-hop. By serving as a talent manager, the 47-year-old hip-hop enthusiast has worked with plenty of artists and decided to invest in many of them throughout their careers. He spent five years in Federal Penitentiary, after which he decided to take a stand for all the inmates and founded the United Prisoner Association. Besides helping talented hip-hop artists jump-start their careers, and inmates improve their lives through his philanthropic organization, Chris Underwood is working to acquire a prominent standing in the world of music as an artist himself. He rocked the music industry with his debut single, “Crazy Love,” which he produced himself. His successful debut was followed by several other hits, including “I’m the Light” and “That’s On MyLife.” In addition to this, he has worked on a plethora of collaborative music projects, including “King God Legend,” with artists such as Bun B, Juvenile, and Boosie Badazz.

Father of a 17-year-old gorgeous girl, Mahiah Underwood, ML Underwood, married Regina Earvin after his divorce. Regina is the owner of Good Scents Oils, and Underwood met during high school. An entrepreneur, music producer, talent manager, and philanthropist, Underwood’s professional portfolio does not stop here. Over the years, he has also worked as an insurance agent, one of his favorite jobs. After attending the engineering program for two years at Purdue college, Chris Underwood started his professional life with a position at the Lee Mar Steel Corporation. He has covered his entire journey in a beautiful literary piece, My Life B4 and After Entertainment, which serves as an inspiration for all those former inmates struggling to make a name in the industry.
